COL. TITUS IN THE CALABOOSE.

The Missouri Democrat of the 16th instant gives the following account of the latest exploit of the notorious Col. Titus, of Kansas and Nicaragua memory, who has lately been carrying on the lumber business in Kansas City. It is decidedly in character:

The difficulty is thus described by the barkeeper and other gentlemen connected with the Planters stare: Col. Titus and one or two of his friends were standing at the bar in the saloon talking about matters in Nicaragua. A man who was occasionally tamping the counter with his mallet. His excited manner caught the attention of a middle-aged gentleman who was sitting by, and who, of course, felt it his duty, under the circumstances, to interpose a friendly word. The man, however, without interrupting the conversation, received a—and a push from the colonel, which sent him to the floor. He arose by the assistance of those standing around him, and while again trying to make his way toward the door, he fell back over the side of the stand, from a cane in the hand of the now enraged colonel. A moment or two afterward, 'Jim,' the porter of the Planters House, came by, and, seeing the drunken fellow lying there, picked him up and carried him away to—a place, and that no gentle-one would do such a thing. The colonel said he was the man who did it. At this the porter showed fight, and when the colonel put out his hand to seize him, he ran away, and was proceeding to level it against the porter, when some one knocked his head down just in time to lodge the load of the pistol in the door, not two inches from the colonel's own feet. The colonel then got up, and went to the door to separate the parties. The colonel was dragged toward the door, when he again levelled his pistol but did not fire. The police now came up, and marched both the runner and the colonel off to the lock-up.

The following account of the difficulty is given by a friend of the Colonel's:

"Col. Titus was in the saloon of the Planter's House, conversing with some friends, when a person of whom I have never heard before, came in and requested to see the Colonel, at which he pushed him way, causing him to fall. The man got up and again pointed to Titus, when he struck him with his cane, cutting the cane. The man then drew a knife and the bartender and the waiter were made up, and the customers drank together. Shortly after, the porter of the hotel, seeing the condition of the man, inquired of him how he got hurt. When he was told, he came forward and in a most inconsiderate manner, he said, "Why didn't you tell me that?" and would do such things as this. Titus then said he was the party, who said the porter rushed at him to strike him. The Colonel immediately drew his revolver to defend himself, and the bartender seized him by the arm. When the porter saw the barrel of the pistol, the ball from which came from the floor. The firing caused an alarm and a stampede. The porter seized a cane and said to Titus, "If you don't get out of here, I will break the bartender's head in." Titus then said he would go to prevent mischief.

The public can draw its own conclusion from the above reports, or suspend its judgment until the matter is investigated this morning before the Recorder.
